

Ian Miller

My name is Ian Miller, and I grew up in San Francisco California. I attended UC Davis for my undergrad and majored in Animal Science with an emphasis in poultry science. My desire to work with poultry began when I was an undergrad and I worked in a research lab working with chickens and guinea fowl. I then began working at my universities poultry facility and gained I great fascination with egg production. After undergrad I worked as a production manager at a large egg-layer operation in Petaluma California for 6 years which greatly increased my knowledge of production. I am currently a 3rd year student at UC Davis School of Veterinary medicine. In my free time I enjoy cooking, homebrewing, backpacking, and exercising my very energetic dog.
